This course is an introduction to the study of modern and historic indigenous peoples. It surveys the concepts, methods and content relevant to Indigenous Studies, using case studies drawn from the diverse indigenous cultures of North America. Special attention is paid to the various ways in which standard academic disciplines -- history, anthropology, literature, law, political science, among others -- contribute to the study of Indigenous cultures and current issues. The course illustrates that the social, political, religious, and economic aspects of “American Indian” life are interconnected and tribal histories and cultures cannot be understood without an awareness of these fields. This course will also address the

When:
Tuesday and Thursday

What Time:
9:30-10:45AM

Where:
Bailey Hall 202

Class #:
67159

This course satisfies:
> Humanities (H)
> Non-Western